Xerox Magnafax Telecopier

The entire chain of manufacturing events, from engineering design to fabrication, is controlled by many departments mutually dependent on accurate, timely communications. If, at any point, information is interpreted inaccurately, or information arrives too late, the result could be disastrous. Where fast, accurate reaction means the difference between profit and loss, Telecopier is indispensable.

Telecopier is a transmitter/receiver combined into one unit about the size of a standard typewriter. It scans a document and transmits signals to the receiving Telecopier, where an exact copy of the original is created on paper.

Identical documents . . . engineering change orders, drawings, inventory requirements, are then available to both parties for immediate comparison, reproduction and, most important, action. Important information down in black on white, where it belongs, to be read, studied and understood. Urgency, accuracy and convenience . . . demands Telecopier.

No need to rewrite data when you use Telecopier. No possibility of transcription errors. Ever! And no wiring into telephones or phone circuits. Telecopier plugs into a standard power outlet. It's ready to use.

Anything on paper you can look at and read . . . drawings, charts and graphs, tabular data, layouts, diagrams, even photographs . . . can be sent by Telecopier. In all phases of manufacturing, Telecopier plays a vital role by helping to provide more lead time each step of the way.

This brochure describes a few of the many ways you can initiate profitable action with Telecopier.

 - 2 Insert your original document.
 - 3 Press the send button.
 - 4 Call the person who will receive your Telecopy.
 - 5 Your recipient slides a Telecopy set into his Telecopier, presses receive and both place phone handsets in Telecouplers.
- Transmission begins automatically. Minutes later . . . an exact Telecopy, right where you need it to spark important action.
